'Best Spirit Ever' in Ottawa

Bennett Bounds Back

Premier Bennett bounded back to his desk yesterday after a flying visit to Ottawa for conferences with Prime Minister Diefenbaker and several cabinet members.

"I found co-operation in all fields," he said. "I found there the best spirit I have ever found there."

He said he discussed the Columbia and Peace River projects at length and "found an attentive audience."

Asked if the federal officials indicated any help in the Peace development, the premier said: "They are interested in northern development. I didn't say they would help financially any more than I have said the province would."

About the Peace, he said: "Those who understand it are all for it . . . there never was an agreement so good for Canada."

"I would say Mr. Diefenbaker understands it well," the premier added.

Asked if he had reached any agreement on unemployment, he said "the only way to stop unemployment is to create employment. We must get great development projects such as the Peace River and Columbia power projects.

"We will be letting additional contracts for highways and other projects shortly. We want to creat as much work as we can," he said.

The premier said there was no intention for the provincial government to co-operate on the federal government's municipal works aid program.

"It is so limited . . . if they came out with a plan to put a great number to work we would co-operate."

Premier Bennett said he presented a plan for joint federal-provincial participation in a natural resources road from Kelsey Bay to Port Hardy, "but I don't want to say whether it is under consideration or not."

No Groundhogs, No Prediction

Victoria will have to do without a Groundhog Day prediction because one of the elements was missing—a groundhog.

Tradition says Feb. 2 groundhogs of the world poke their heads above ground to make a weather prediction. If they see their shadow, winter will last another six weeks, if not, winter will end early.

Dr. Clifford Carl, curator of the Provincial Museum, says there are no groundhogs.

If the fable of the groundhogs ability was true, though, this area would have another six weeks of winter.

"There were periods of sunshine during the morning," said weatherman William Mackie, enough for groundhogs, if there were any, to see their shadows.
